Report: Spanier to face charges?

FOX Sports
June 11, 2012

Investigators are mulling whether to bring charges against former Penn State president Graham Spanier for possibly helping to cover up child abuse allegations against Jerry Sandusky, NBC News reported Monday.

The report stated authorities have "major new evidence," including emails between Spanier, former university vice president Gary Schultz and ex-athletic director Tim Curley.

Schultz and Curley have pleaded not guilty to perjury charges for allegedly lying to a grand jury about what they were told about Sandusky's alleged conduct.

One email between Spanier and Schultz reportedly concluded with them agreeing it would be "humane" not to tell authorities about possible child molestation by the assistant football coach in 2001.

Spanier, who was fired last year following Sandusky's arrest, sued the university May 25 in a bid to obtain his old emails.

The university said in a statement Monday that the new evidence was given to authorities after being uncovered during the school's own probe into how the Sandusky allegations were handled.

"In the course of former FBI Director Louis Freeh's Independent Investigation, e-mails were discovered and immediately turned over to the State Attorney General," Penn State spokesman David La Torre said, according to StateCollege.com.

"In deference to the legal process, the University cannot comment further on specifics of the ongoing legal case as it unfolds. We continue to work with the State Attorney General, the US Attorney and Judge Freeh in their investigations into this matter.

"We will continue to cooperate fully with all legal processes to determine what happened and ensure personal accountability."

Opening arguments in Sandusky's trial begin Monday. The 68-year-old has pleaded not guilty to sexually assaulting 10 boys over a 15-year period. Link to Original
